More specifically, the present invention relates to an adjustable shelf system which is inexpensive to manufacture and install. Adjustable shelves are generally constructed to be attached to a frame or support structure for supporting objects such as boxes, plant pots, plant baskets, and the like. The most basic construction of an adjustable shelf comprises a shelf member having two faces, a first horizontal face and a second vertical face. A flange or ledge is provided around the periphery of the shelf member which is adapted to engage a support structure. The height of the adjustable shelf is adjusted by turning the shelf member about a cylindrical hub located at the top or bottom of the shelf member. In U.S. Pat. No. 2,747,314, a shelf is adjustable relative to a support structure by slidable engagement of a series of interlocking members. To provide adjustability, each interlocking member has an arcuate protuberance, the arcuate protuberances of the first end member and the second end member being complementary to each other. The arcuate protuberances are engageable and disengageable with one another. The interlocking member has a second face, which is arcuate in configuration, opposite the first face. This second face cooperates with a complementary second face on a bracket member, which is attached to the support structure, to ensure that the shelf does not move relative to the bracket member. U.S. Pat. No. 3,971,518 discloses a shelf construction wherein a shelf member is provided with an opening adapted to be aligned with a corresponding opening in an adjustable bracket member. In this construction, the shelf member may be rotated to permit angular adjustment in the direction of the height of the shelf member. In the direction of the width of the shelf member, the shelf
