Vas 5054a odis 4.1.3 windows 7 Herpes simplex type-2 virus infection leads to chronic corneal scarring that can lead to blindness and is becoming a major blinding condition in many regions of the world. While we have learned a great deal about the biology of HSV-1 in the recent past, progress in understanding the pathogenesis of HSV-2 in the eye has been frustratingly slow. The overall objective of this proposal is to develop an in vivo model of HSV-2 corneal stromal disease. Recently, we have developed a new in vivo model for the study of HSV-2 corneal stromal disease using primary hamster eyes. In this model, viral inoculation of the cornea leads to punctate corneal stromal opacities that are best visualized by light transmission microscopy. Animals that survive the initial infection recover and do not develop HSV-2 stromal disease. We will use this new model to study important issues in the pathogenesis of HSV-2 stromal disease. The SPECIFIC AIMS are to: 1) characterize the temporal and spatial kinetics of viral production following corneal inoculation and determine whether the virus is present in the corneal epithelium at the time of inoculation; 2) define the relationship of viral replication to the
