A: Since you are actually trying to do a "math" operation with this, you can use python's eval() function to evaluate any string you want, taking into account that eval() is dangerous and should only be used with caution. Here's an example print "6.3".replace('.', ',').replace('/', ',').replace(',', '.') This outputs 6.3 Which is what you want. There are some safer ways to "escape" this (like using r" to open it in a python string literal), but to actually go on and do math, eval is the simplest solution. Plumbing fixtures, such as toilets, urinals, bidets, showers, and similar water closets, commonly include a water-inlet chamber defined by a water inlet valve. The inlet valve is typically configured to prevent water from flowing into the fixture unless an associated fixture-mounted control lever is actuated. A water level within the water-inlet chamber is monitored by a float chamber. When the float chamber detects a sufficient level of water within the chamber, the float chamber actuates a valve stem-actuating mechanism to open the inlet valve and permit water to flow into the fixture for use. It will be appreciated that, as water is used, the water level within the float chamber decreases. As a consequence, after use, the float chamber will not actuate the inlet valve as readily. To address this problem, most self-
