I met a couple who moved to the 'dear old'n'restful' country to be closer to their daughter who is being medically treated for diabetes. They said it was hard being away, and it was, but they had an amazing time. That's the only way to travel. I didn't stay long, but it was enough to get me through the flight and the car ride home. I realized a lot while I was in England. First, I realized how much I still have to learn. It's been a while since I was in a foreign country and lived like a local. It's a great way to travel, but it can be a bit confusing. I would much rather travel to see places than places travel to see me. The whole thing was weird. I've never had to adapt to the city traffic here, but in the UK it's a whole different story. The young people drive like maniacs! My favorite way to get around was by walking. My mind would race as I compared the crowds to the masses on the streets, and I didn't want to get lost! The roads are not that busy, but they're also not the best quality in the country. The signage is minimal at best, and for some reason, the people speak in strange languages. It's the most "foreign" place I've ever been. Secondly, I realized I still have much to learn about the Bible. It's the only book that has ever been read to the entire human race, and it's the only book that calls out Jesus as the "Christ." I've seen plenty of Christians who just don't get it. They say it's just a book that they use to keep them on the straight and narrow. Some don't even know the basic story of God. They think the Bible is some old book handed down to us by our ancestors. God IS a living God
