As an open-source project, the Jamendo community relies on donations and community funding to remain free and ad-supported. The Jamendo community-funded site in Berlin is supported by the City of Berlin, while the podcast is maintained by Swiss radio channel, Radio Kultur. The Jamendo platform is based on the WordPress content management system, with which users can create their own personalised lists of favourite music, based on individual profiles, categories, artists or genres. The website and the accompanying app allow users to search, download and listen to audio files, and embed and share video clips and photographs of music artists and their work. All audio files for the Jamendo website are stored on the file-storage service Cloud Files. Cloud Files is a SaaS (Software as a Service) platform for file and data storage. . The music feed is hosted in the RESTful API of Jamendo, and other supplementary functions can be accessed by JSON and XML protocols. Novelties are paid for

Turbulent combustion of methane (CH_4) and propane (C_3H_8) in a helium atmosphere leads to the formation of intense supershells where metal clusters are produced. The bulk of these metal clusters contain only one metal atom. Here we present the low-temperature molecular structures and electronic properties of clusters of Os and Ru containing one to four atoms. Our results show that the shape of the clusters remains essentially trigonal planar and the number of d electrons remains constant. In contrast to the small Ru clusters, the d orbital energies are reduced by an increasing number of Os atoms in the cluster.The 82138339de
