According to a GoFundMe page created by a nonprofit foundation in Birmingham, the teddy bear, which is on display in the State Capitol, has some deep-seated problems. The teddy bear is missing a button that is an official symbol of Alabama - the state's flag. The bear has four eyes, but the fifth is missing. The bear's chest pocket lacks the official emblem of the Alabama Medical Association, which has been there since a federal court ruled against the state last year. The bear is also missing the official shield of the University of Alabama, which puts an image of a Native American in the spot. According to the GoFundMe page, the bear's insides are full of old, moldy food. It's filled with a mix of beef jerky, Skittles, some peanut butter, a Nintendo system and a tissue that looks like it's from the 1990s. A previous GoFundMe for the bear, which asked for $3,500, did not end up raising much money. The teddy bear was brought to the state Capitol in 2017 as a gift to the state. It's been there since then, except for some time in 2018 when it was moved to the Senate side of the Capitol. A new bear isn't being created because of its issues. Instead, the bear is being repaired and cleaned up with donations. The bear will be on display on the floor of the state House again when the 2019 legislative session starts in March. GoFundMe says that before the teddy bear can be put back on display, it has to be cleaned up and re-dyed. The bear is scheduled to return to the Senate side of the Capitol in April.Q: How to stop certain lines in string of list item count from showing up?
