On-ball skill in FIFA 20 was improved by improving contextual awareness between players, a new visual display of player movement and increased accuracy on head-to-head shots. Included in the new 'Full Team Experience' are several features to add more authentic depth to match-ups. The key team chemistry features include: 3v3 Attack Mode A new AI-controlled NPC teammate that will offer helpful or harmful suggestions as you play. NPC teammates will dynamically adapt to a team's attack mode and formation, switching between defending, staying back, moving up the field or making runs up the pitch. If the team becomes gung-ho, the NPC will begin making attack runs and approaching goal. If the team becomes more defensive, the NPC teammate will make runs back towards the mid-field. If the team's attack mode changes to a 4v4 Attack from a 3v3 Attack, the NPC teammates will now make runs towards the midfield or into positions to protect themselves. In-game Team Chemistry Scores A new team chemistry measure allows for team leaders to see their team's performance. Team chemistry in FIFA 20 provided a method to see how well you performed as a team in your matches. The team chemistry score provides a brief snapshot view of a player's overall performance, and how it is compared to the team. It's now more pronounced and persistent, allowing players to see how they are faring, or how they need to improve. The new FIFA Team Chemistry scores are viewable in match-info summary screen, and include specific details about how each player affected the team's performance. Hover over a player in team summary screen and select specific player to see team chemistry. Kick It Forward FIFA 20 featured a "Kick It Forward" feature, which gave fans the ability to unlock items for purchase directly within the game, once unlocked. Now, players can create an unlimited number of replays of an in-game action, and share them with fans. Players create a new replay by selecting an option in game, pressing [Left] (X button), [Right] (Y button), then [Left] and [Right] again to choose the shot or action to play. Players select a desired action from the available options, then apply a motion capture to it. Once created, players can share the

It was a great fusion of the consoles (and PC) with mobile gaming. I returned to this game expecting the best, and I was not disappointed. I never played World of Warcraft, an MMO with a dedicated army of fans, but I was very familiar with Nintendo's MMORPG Mario Kart 7. The first thing you're greeted with is a Mario Kart-style kart selection screen. A quick, slick feature that lets you choose which kart you'd like to play as. Choose a Cup, Play as One of the 4 Mario Villains, or pick a Vehicle, or even a Character. Once you enter an Online Zone, you pick a race track from the on-map background. This is fairly simple and functional, but the map is a bit lacking in detail. You have certain objectives to complete, such as earning enough coins in certain laps. Once you've completed them, they turn in and you're ready to race. Each of the races can be a timed, or free-roaming. Either way, you're given choices of either Super Mario or a Mario Kart character to play as. Each character will have a unique set of abilities, which really isn't a huge difference. You can only play as one character per race, so it isn't like there is any strategy involved in who you want to pick. You can also re-position your kart mid-race, though I noticed it doesn't really do anything but keep it in the middle of the track. Your karts are pre-designed, and you can swap parts as you wish, but there is not too much that can be altered here. And of course, you can always turn the karts on or off. Each track has been laid out with some subtle track logic and physics,
