“In a game that is as fast and frenetic as football, we wanted to get player movement as authentic as possible,” said Steve Martin, FIFA lead gameplay programmer and creative director. “We’ve been working on this technology, which is based on real-life player movement, for a long time now. We’ve been experimenting with it on some of our early prototypes in the development process and the results have been outstanding. When we hear from our players and fans that the player movements in FIFA and Madden are among the best, we know we’re on the right path.” FIFA 22’s on-field gameplay features include: Reaction Shots: Call a pass, swing a pass, shot or dribble in the direction of your player and receive a free, powerful shot at goal from your player’s run. Instant Dribbling: Combine short passing and dribbling to beat defenders and open up the field. Accelerate to break through pressure. Speed Up: Accelerate faster through quicker players. Tries to beat defenders with agility. High-Speed Acceleration: Quicken up the pace and unleash a powerful shot from close range. Faster Footwork: Sprint to make smarter, quicker decisions. Slides tackles with finesse. Backing up the flashy new gameplay is a complete re-imagining of FIFA’s Movement Engine, which powers all ball-based gameplay: Manually Driven Movement: Players move exactly how you want them to. Equipped Players: Adjust the ball’s movement with your chosen ball-control style, and see your player’s positioning influence the game’s ball physics. Aerial Shot Control: Deflect shots on-the-run with your goalkeeper’s positioning, or control the trajectory of a shot using your goalkeeper’s positioning and timing. Fluid Motion: Move freely with no restrictions on how you play the game. Players can dribble on their own or pass to team mates. FIFA 22 is available for PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and PC. It will be released worldwide on September 28, 2015. Visit FIFA.com for more information and continue the conversation on Twitter @FIFAWorldwide..
