Below is a video explaining more about the real-life data used to make the game: FIFA 20 also featured a new series of 11 demo tests, which testers were able to play and take screenshots of using the main menu, create teams, edit players and press the new "Pro match mode" button to create the standard form of gameplay. The demo tests were run by footballers for the game's development team to understand the benefits of every new feature in the game and what would need to be adjusted. Players were also invited to share their ideas for refinements and improvements to the game on a dedicated thread on the FIFA forums. Here are some highlights from the FIFA 20 demo test, which will be available to try before the game is released later this year: New tifo animations Today's matchday fans will now have a better idea about what's happening at their team's stadium. Every time a tactical or cultural change is made, you'll see the crowd take a different reaction. Premiere League fans have also been able to try out new animations for their team kits, with a series of fan-created animations. The fans' teams will also have the ability to customize the kits and stadium based on how they would like the team to look to the fan. New stadium animations Players will now have to adapt to the top quality of their stadium. Stadiums are now animated in a more dynamic way. New players, tactics and club kits Today's game also features 50 new player, tactical and club kit options. These options are available in the Ultimate Team community, using the new and exciting FIFA coins. Updated stadiums When you play on a large stadium, you'll notice less crowds when entering and exiting. We made this happen by improving the artificial intelligence of the crowd, adding more players and making sound louder. Improved performance As the game gets the data from these demo tests and so on, the game will get better and better, and you should have a lot of fun on FIFA 20. FIFA 20 is released on September 27th for Xbox One, PlayStation 4 and PC. It will also be released on Wii U on October 11th.
